

Community Educator

Volunteer Purpose

Providing education to our community is an engagement strategy to further our organizational mission and deepen our connection to our local community. We believe that by educating our community on the importance of blood donation, as well as facilitating an increased understanding of blood as a life-saving therapy, it will further connect individuals to our life-saving mission.

As part of a team the Community Educator will serve as a subject matter expert by presenting the America's Blood Centers curriculum Vein-to-Vein (V2V) in educational settings. This newly developed program is a component of Bloodwork's broader community engagement strategy. The goal behind presenting the V2V curriculum at high schools is to inspire, educate and involve younger donors who will become committed advocates for blood donation.

Responsibilities

The Community Educator will work with the cross-departmental team charged with development and oversight of this new project. This team includes leaders from our medical, community engagement and volunteer management groups. Some of the requirements and tasks include:

- Full understanding of the V2V curriculum and individual modules
- Provide feedback to all stakeholders about the project and curriculum
- Meet with all team members routinely to assess progress and goals
- Proficient in the understanding of blood collection and donation as a critical community need
- Creative in the delivery and options within the curriculum that can be modified to meet a targeted audience
- Participate in the delivery of the Bloodworks V2V program using a variety of delivery methods (virtual, in-person)
- Participate in scheduling, evaluation and resource development related to the Bloodworks V2V program as needed

Qualifications:

- Experience presenting topics related to public health, medical and/or blood collection or as an educator
- Ability to present to a diverse audience and make adaptations to meet specific needs of the group
- Ability to manage scheduling commitments, communicate with all relevant parties and represent Bloodworks in a professional manner
- Public speaking experience (highly desired)
